Acrobat has a 'find' facility in the 'edit' menu so you can easily locate specific titles / subjects / authors.

Condition varies. I have only noted when books are fine (as new), poor or have any obvious defects.
Where size is not listed, books are octavo. I will supply further details and photos of any items of interest on request.
Postage is charged at cost or you are welcome to visit me in Brentford by appointment where you can view the books and much other London related material: paintings, prints, photos, magic lantern slides, post cards, ephemera, artefacts . . .

COURNOS, John. London Under the Bolsheviks. A Londoner's dream on returning from Petrograd. 'This is not a fantasy, in spite of the title. It is a true and precise picture of Petrograd during the first few months of the Bolshevist Revolution. The author has placed the scenes in London merely to emphasise the realities of the Bolshevist nightmare, to bring it home to those who do not quite realise the nature of the Russian upheaval. If the result appears fantastic, let the reader beware of blaming it on the imagination of the author. The author would feel flattered were it not that, unfortunately, he is too well aware of what his eyes have seen.' 12pp booklet published in paper covers by the Rusian Liberation Committee, 173 Fleet Street. Queen Magazine. Swingeing London issue. A cutting response to Time magazine's Swinging London issue. Includes 'Dancing Chic to Chic', an amusing review of clubs and discotheques by Anthony Haden-Guest. Includes the guest list for the opening night party at Sibylla's, generally regarded as the cast list of Londoners who actually participated in the 'swinging'. In 'Swingers - I

Hate You' by Anthony Blond, he points out that 'Time magazine's anglophile writer probably grosses at least $20,000 a year without expenses. If she lived here on £7,000 per annum she'd be laughing. Just how much richer Americans are than we is shown by the fact that an American family officially hits the federal poverty line at $4,000, some £450 per annum in excess of the average British annual income of £1,000! 4to. 1966 pb fine Rare £50

MILLINSHIP, William. Venice in London. A few hundred yards from Islington High Street, the back streets skirt round a thick screen of trees and shrubs tangled behind a fence. It might be the grounds of a derelict house, but an occasional glint of light on water filters through the trees, and a sad, faded blue board says 'British Waterways'. Hidden, neglected and often beautiful, an eight-mile canal cutst hrough the middle of London - under the Angel and through the Zoo - offering strange glimpses of early Victorian London. Picture Post. It's Carnival Time in London's Little Europe. Soho celebrates this week. Just what they are celebrating, nobody seems to know. But the French and Italian population there need little excuse to dance in the streets, to put ribbons in their children's dark hair and sing to the sun and moon. life itself is a festival, they said, so let's have a fair - let's celebrate the joy of living. The Sunday Times Magazine. Passport to Soho. This is the bizarre square mile where the island race rubs shoulders with the rest of the world. Pleasure is business, and every taste is catered for; but the unwary visitor can still lose £50 in one ill-spent evening. We invaded Soho in force to see just what goes on there during the course of a typical twenty-four hours. This issue gets under the surface of Soho on a typical day in November - seen by a Sunday Times Magazine team of writers and photographers. 36pp Very well illustrated, featuring contributions from 26 writers, photographers and artists inc. painted panorama of buildings/businesses of Greek Street. 13 x 10" 1968 pb Rare £30

The Sunday Times Magazine. Twenty-four hours in the life of Soho. Story by Denis Herbstein. Photographs by William Klein. Behind the façade of good food and bad women, the London community of Soho is fighting for survival. Barely a generation ago the village flourished. Italians, Frenchmen, East European Jews, even Englishmen, lived and worked there in pokey but homely circumstances. Now the craftsmen are being chased away, while the population dwindles and ages. Property developers, vice merchants and the Westminster City Council might already have delivered the knock out blow. 19pp article in 126pp magazine. 13 x 10" 1980 pb Rare £35

Behind the façade of good food and bad women, the London community of Soho is fighting for survival. Barely a generation ago the village flourished. Italians, Frenchmen, East European Jews, even Englishmen, lived and worked there in pokey but homely circumstances. Now the craftsmen are being chased away, while the population dwindles and ages. Property developers, vice merchants and the Westminster City Council might already have delivered the knock out blow. 19pp article in 126pp magazine. 13 x 10" 1980 pb Tear to cover without loss. Illustrated London News. Tightening the Green Belt by Michael Wolfers. 'Since its successful introduction in the 1930s London's green belt has grown in size and in popular favour. A sugestion that 2,000 acres might shortly be used for housing has alerted those organizations concerned to protect and if possible extend the present open areas.' + Decline of the Cockney by Louis Heren. The post-war rebuilding of much of London's bomb-damaged areas has swept away many long-established East End communities. Here, the writer recalls his own childhood in the poor but lively neighbourhood of Shadwell, where Cockneys and immigrants lived alongside each other.' 128pp magazine. folio 1973 pb £10

DANIELS, Stephen intro. The Great Public Buildings of London. 2 vols. pp336 & 330. This two-volume work which was first published in 1825-8 presents London's most important buildings at a time of rapid urban transformation. Aiming to project a vision of London as a dynamic city of integrated courtly and commercial power, the 70 entries span a historical range from the medieval (Westminster Hall) to the early nineteenth century (Soane's Museum) and a diversity of building types from palaces and churches to banks, theatres, prisons and bridges. Edited by John Britton, a leading topographical authority of the period, and Auguste Charles Pugin, an Anglo-French architectural draughtsman, the volumes contain 146 engravings of the selected buildings, correctly scaled from different perspectives and including interior scenes as well as external plans. This was a landmark publication in its time and remains a vivid portrait of the London's built environment immediately before the advent of the railway. 2020 fine £50

The misery and starvation in London cannot be allowed to exist without interference for its extinction. The thought is unendurable that coroners' inquests are required upon the bodies of honest men and women certified by medical gentlemen to have died from want of food. It is stated that in one parish, that of Islington, the paupers numbered 4,700 last year and are now between 7,000 and 8,000 . . . 8pp broadsheet newspaper. 1870 Some wear and small tears to edges. 'Illustrated' Magazine. They Roll Out the Barrows by Robert Jackson. Photographs by Jack Esten. 'Selling fruit in the streets isn't always the easy-money game it sounds. Fines, and the wages of a look-out man, are heavy items in a barrow boy's budget.' A sample caption to a wonderful photo reads: 'Banned from Oxford Street because of traffic regulations, barrow boys must do the best they can. Between Oxford Circus and Tottenham Court Road are some bombed buildings. At the bottom of steps from Oxford Street barrow boys set out their stall which is easily seen from the road on the other side of the bombed site and as easily reached.' + The Four Faces of Westminster.
